

Thomas Jefferson, Plantsman

Thomas Jefferson was an avid gardener and plant collector who brought flower and vegetable varieties from Europe to Monticello, his home in Charlottesville, Virginia. Beginning in 1986, his garden has been restored. The Monticello Center for Historic Plants has now made seeds for many of Jefferson's plants available to gardeners. See <https://bit.ly/34mIOjI>

February is a Perfect Time to Purchase Seeds

Seed companies and garden centers are stocked up with a generous supply of seeds to choose from, so now is the time to plan your garden and purchase seeds. Consider purchasing from Colorado-based seed companies, which offer many varieties suited to our shorter growing season.

The principal Colorado-based seed companies are:

Beauty Beyond Belief (BBB) (Boulder) A small farm offering a wide variety of heirloom, organic, open-pollinated vegetable, flower and wildflower seeds. <https://bbbseed.com/>

Blue Lake Bush Bean
Botanical Interests

Botanical Interests (Boulder) A family-owned business that offers over 600 varieties of heirloom and organic seeds. Artistic renderings of vegetables are showcased on their seed packets. The packets provide detailed information on growing the plant. <https://www.botanicalinterests.com/>

Burrell Seed Growers, LLC (Rocky Ford) This company, which has been producing and selling seed since 1900, is dedicated to preserving heirlooms and open-pollinated seeds. They proudly offer generous sized seed packets at modest prices. Antique drawings of vegetables grace some of their seed packets. <https://burrellseeds.us/>

Better Boy Tomato (Hybrid)
Burrell Seed Growers

MASA Seed Foundation. (Boulder) MASA is a bio-regional seed bank supported through small-scale production of seeds and produce. It promotes recovery of heirloom seeds, pushing back against the industrially-controlled food system that has GMO seeds as its driving force. MASA's website explains its mission and provides information about a wide range of edible plants and herbs. Seeds are pricey but they do support a cause. Miss Penn's Mountain Seeds. Penn and Cord Parmenter are mountain food and seed growers and high altitude gardening teachers at their farm in Westcliffe, Colorado (elevation 8,120'). They are passionate tomato growers and promote intensive gardening to maximize production in a small space. <https://bit.ly/3Lh2oOT>

Pueblo Seed & Food Co. (aka Farm Direct Seed) Vegetable varieties developed at Hobbs & Meyer Farms located in the Arkansas Valley east of Pueblo and in Cortez, Colorado. This company specializes in southwestern native corn, beans, garlic, chile peppers and a wide range of other vegetables.

Are They Viable?

Many gardeners buy fresh seed each year. They consider the effort a gardener puts into preparing the soil and planting the seed significant enough that they feel new seed is well worth the expense.

Other gardeners disagree. They know that seed kept in a cool place may stay viable for several years, especially larger seed, such as beans and squash. They know that that it probably will germinate pretty well and will produce vigorous plants.

If you are considering planting last year's (or older) seeds, sprout some to see how viable they are. Place 10-12 seeds on a moist paper towel, put inside a plastic bag in a warm place, and see how many germinate and how strong they are.

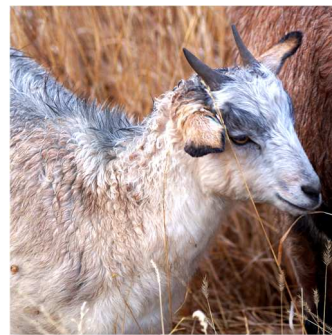

The Garden Father

Larry Stebbins is a local botanist, author, radio host and educator who has founded twelve (mostly raised bed) community gardens over the years in Colorado Springs. He is a member of the Old Farm community garden in northeast Colorado Springs.

Larry provides a garden blog on his website and has started a new "Garden Podcast" series as well. The first podcast is "Getting Started" (tips for the beginning gardener) and the second is "Raised Bed Gardening" which is not done at our garden but might be helpful for a home gardener. The third, "Fertile Organic Soils" (the whys and hows of building the best organic soil for your garden).

The blog and podcasts can be accessed easily on Larry's website: www.thegardenfather.com

Mama and Baby Goats Were Here for Christmas

Lani Malmberg brought a herd of 600 cashmere goats, including many mamas and babies, to Bear Creek Park for ten days of grazing in late December.

Thank you to everyone who donated to the BCGA Goat Fund throughout the year to make this grazing possible. Thank you to our many friends of the goats who came to visit Lani and the herd dogs, and thank you to the visitors who kept their dogs on leash for the safety of everyone concerned.

The goats did a fine job of weed and wildfire mitigation in the 20 acres around the community garden.
